Argentina has prepared fresh proposals to avert war in the South Atlantic. They will be made known to the British Government in the next few days but the indications are that they do not represent a substantial shift of ground.

From Nicholas Ashford, Washington, April 23 Mr Francis Pym, the Foreign Secretary, continued his talks with Mr Alexander Haig, the Secretary of State, and other senior Administration officials today with little apparent hope of finding a solution which would prevent Britain and Argentina going to war over the Falklands. American sources said they expected the British task force to go into action over the next few days, probably with an assault on South Georgia. Mr Pym would only comment that the fleet was "on course and on time". Another committee mem-ber Senator Clairborne Pell-added that if diplomacy failed "when push comes to shove, Security Council Resolution the American people will be with the British". However, Administration officials have made it clear that the United States has no intention of abandoning its attempts to mediate between Britain and Argentina for the time being, even if British forces do go into action during the next few days.

Emphasizing that Washington was determined to continue its present dialogue with London and Buenos Aires, a State Department official said: "The United States will not automatically time".

Despite the wide gap which still exists between the British and Argentine proposals for a solution of the states will not automatically abandon its honest broker role even if fighting starts."

Mr Pym has gone out of his way since his arrival in Washington yesterday to praise Mr Haig's energetic diplomacy aimed at preventing hostilities breaking out in the South Atlantic. At the posals for a solution of the dispute, Mr Pym has been considerably encouraged by the expressions of support he heard when he attended a meeting of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee last night. Senator Charles Percy, the committee chairman, said:
"There is no question in my mind as to where the sentiments of the American people are — they are solidly with the United Kingdom".

Senators who met Mr Pym last night said today they were pessimistic that a formula could be found that would satisfy both Britain and Argentinia. However, American officials felt they had detected some flexibility in the British position.

Americans interpreted this Americans interpreta-flexibility as an attempt to show that if the talks failed, it would not be because of British intransigence.

Mr Pym's first appointment today was with Mr William Clark, the national security adviser. This was followed by a meeting with Mr Haig at the State Department. Mr Haig was then due to have lunch with Mr Pym and Sir Nicholas Henderson, the British Ambassador.

The Transport (Lonon) Act 1969 (Amendment) Bill would clarify the law currently in confusion and prevent major damage being done to London Transport and London's economy by excessively high fares, Mr Douglas Jay (Wandsworth, Battersea, North, Lab) said in the Commons when moving the second reading of his Bill.

The Bill did not enforce particular transport policy of level of fares. It retained the principle that London Transport must balance current revenue and expenditure as far as was practicable. It made clear beyond further legal doubt that for this purpose grants from the Greater London Council might be counted as revenue by London Transport.

The Bill provided for the GLC to make grants towards the

Mr Reginald Eyre Under Secretary of State for Transport said that the recent GLC advertising campaign on this issue had been based on distortion, misrepresenbased on distortion, misrepresentation, and suppression of the truth and was a kcandalous misuse of public funds.

The Bill did not say what the level of support was to be and how it was to be paid. It did not clarify the situation nor say how the costs would be met. Two-thirds of London's rates were born by industry and commerce, which had no local wore and whose prosperity was vital authorities concerned—the GLC and central government. That was a reasonable and democratic arrangement.

The alternative was legal muddle—because legal advisers had different views on what the recent Law Lords' judgment meant—and greater damage being done to London Transport.

The law lords judgment required London Transport to do something which was commer-

More control urged on social work

By Pat Healy, Social Services Correspondent

Social workers are needed premature and there is no as never before, according to public demand for it. government-sponsored inquiry into their role and tasks. But their clients need better safeguards, social work practice itself should be subject to more control and there should be a fundamen-tal shift towards working more with local communities.

The inquiry team's report, rushed out yesterday a month ahead of official publication because of leaks in the social work press, says that social workers are carrying out essential tasks which would not otherwise be done. Contrary to popular belief, most social workers are not young, do have experience and are generally appreciated by the people they belp.

But clients rights should be formalized and streng-thened partly because the disadvantages that brought them to social workers in the first place may mean they are in a poor position to fight for their rights.

The report recommends that clients should be allowed to participate in decisions affecting them, as far. as possible, receive information about those decisions, be given a channel of anneal and given a channel of appeal and have access to a second opinion.

But the report rejects the idea of a general social work council, proposed by the British Association of Social Workers and endorsed by the British Medical Association but opposed by both em-ployers and trade unions. The idea, the report says, is

Invincible's pilots stand by to scramble

From John Witherow on board HMS Invincible April 23

Harrier squadrons harmer squadrons on board the two carriers HMS Invincible and HMS Hermes have gone on full alert to intercept Argentine surveillance aircraft as the Royal Navy task force moves close to the Falkland Islands.

A Harrier is now prepared to take off within minutes of the first radar contact with an unidentified aircraft and rapidly intercept it at more than 100 miles from the fleet. This alert followed the interception by an armed Harrier from Hermes of an Argentine Air Force Boeing 707 on Wednesday.

Within hours of the alert coming into operation a fighter from the Invincible intercepted a second Boeing 707 carrying out long range surveillance at night and the fact that this was repeated within 18 hours indicates this form of reconnaissance will become increasingly frequent as the fleet comes within range of Argentine surveillance aircraft.

Lieutenant Brian Haigh, aged 32, who was the first pilot on the Invincible to be scrambled to meet a 707, stayed close to it for a few minutes before it headed off in a south-westerly direction.
"I went alongside him with my lights flashing so he knew I was there", he said.

"I then went underneath him and after about four minutes of this he rolled. I think he was looking for me so I popped up again beside him. He added that the 707, of which the Argentine is said to have three, did not overfly

Pilots on 24-hour alert now take it in turns to sit strapped in their cockpits on the flightdecks waiting to be scrambled. "It is very quiet in there waiting for an hour or so", Lieutenant Com-mander Robin Kent, the senior pilot, said. "You just look at the sky".

The Harriers, armed with sidewinder missiles and cannon, are also flying hundreds of miles ahead of the task force on reconnaissance while Sea King helicopters are searching the ocean around the fleet for potentially hostile submarines. As a result of this possible threat, the Invincible and other ships have brought themselves to a full readiness for combat.

The 19,500-ton carrier carrying 1,000 men, entered defence stations today and is likely to maintian them for some considerable time.

Not only does this mean the crew is ready for combat at any time through a complicated system of watch-es, but it means the ship becomes a considerabley more austere unit prepared for any possibility. A nonce endue

Britons told of risks in Argentina

By Our Foreign Staff

THE TIMES SATURDAY APRIL 24 1982

The British Government The British Government last night intensified its warnings to British citizens to leave Argentina if at all possible. A statement broadcast by the BBC World Service sald that, now that the British naval task force was approaching the area of the Palkland Islands, a period of increasing tension and risk could lie ahead. British citizens who had not acted citizens who had not acted upon earlier warnings should consider again whether they

The new warning followed the receipt of death threats by British citizens in South America from what appeared to be an Argentine terrorist organization. The Foreign Office said that it was taking seriously threats of reprisals against British families if war broke out between Britain and Argentina.

The threats, which were contained in letters sent by an organization which called itself the Armed Group for the Defence of the Malvinas Islands, were received by British citizens in Montivi-deo, the capital of Uruguay.

M Loius Delamare was shot dead in his chauffeur-driven car in West Beirut while travelling home to lunch. His assassins were never identified and — this being Lebanon — were never found.

In fact, the word in Beirut after M Delamare's death was that a Lebanese Shia militia group had killed him on instructions from the Iranian Government which was angry at France's decision to sell Mirage jet fighters to Presi-dent Saddam Husain's regime in Iraq. IN ANSWER TO OUR CALL FOR HELP, AS WORLD TEACHER FOR ALL HUMANITY,

THE CHRIST IS NOW HERE.

HOW WILL WE RECOGNIZE HIM?

Look for a modern man concerned with modern problems—political, economic, and social. Since July, 1977, the Christ has been emerging as a spokesman for a group or community in a well-known modern country. He is not a religious leader, but an educator in the broadest sense of the word—pointing the way out of our present crisis.

We will recognize him by his extraordinary spiritual potency, the universality of his viewpoint, and his love for all humanity. He comes not to judge, but to aid and inspire.

WHO IS THE CHRIST?

Throughout history, humanity's evolution has been guided by a group of enlightened men, the Masters of Wisdom. They have remained largely in the remote desert and mountain places of earth, working mainly through their disciples who live openly in the world.

This message of the Christ's reappearance has been given primarily by such a disciple trained for his task for over 20 years.

At the center of this "Spiritual Hierarchy" stands the World Teacher, Lord Maitreya, known by Christians as the Christ. And as Christians await the Second Coming, so the Jews await the Messiah, the Buddhists the fifth Buddha, the Moslims the Imam Mahdi, and the Hindus await Krishna. These are all names for one individual.

His presence in the world guarantees there will be no third World War.

WHAT IS HE SAYING?

"My task will be to show you how to live together peacefully as brothers. This is simpler than you imagine, my friends, for it requires only the acceptance of sharing."

"How can you be content with the modes within which you now live: when millions starve and die in squalor; when the rich parade their wealth before the poor; when each man is his neighbor's enemy; when no man trusts his brother?"

"Allow me to show you the way forward into a simpler life where no man lacks; where no two days are alike; where the Joy of Brotherhood manifests through all men.

"Take your brother's need as the measure for your action and solve the problems of the world."

WHEN WILL WE SEE HIM?

He has not as yet declared his true status, and his location is known to only a very few disciples. One of these has announced that soon the Christ will acknowledge his identity and within the next two months will speak to humanity through a worldwide television and radio broadcast. His message will be heard inwardly, telepathically, by all people in their own language.

From that time, with his help, we will build a new world.

WITHOUT SHARING THERE CAN BE NO JUSTICE; WITHOUT JUSTICE THERE CAN BE NO PEACE; WITHOUT PEACE THERE CAN BE NO FUTURE.

Schmidt's olive branch to pacifists From Patricia Clough, Munich, April 23

Herr Helmut Schmidt, the West German Chancellor, today urgently tried to patch up a last-minute rift with the pacifist wing at the Social Democrat Party congress which had threatened to undo a week of efforts for reconciliation.

The Chancellor had unwittingly upset many delegates a strategy would be a serious able intentions and wanted peace as much as they; the dispute was merely about the best way to secure it. He went on to quote a warning by Professor Carifriedrich von Weizsäcker, a leading physiciat and one of West Germany's most eminent thinkers, that a departure from Nato's missile have ruined the atmosphere of mutual respect which both sides had worked hard to build up during the Congress.

Some facts you may want to know about the Malvinas and have probably never been told.

The Malvinas are a group of islands off the coast of Argentina.

The British call them the Falklands. They were discovered on April 7. 1504 by the famous Florentine navigator and cartographer, Amerigo Vespucci.

Held by Spain from 1600 until 1811

Spain held legal rights to the Islands from January 24, 1600 until February 11, 1811. These rights were never formally disputed by any other nation during that period.

However, in the mid-1700's, "Squatters" from France and England enjoyed brief stays in the Islands. Frenchmen from St. Malo (hence the name "Malouines") settled there between 1764 and 1767, but left as a result of the enforcement of Article 6 of the "Pacto de Pamilia" between Spain and France.

The British moved into the Islands around 1765, were expelled by the Spaniards in February 1768, returned in 1771, and left again on May 20, 1774. Spain then placed the Islands under the jurisdiction of Buenos Aires.

Between 1774 and 1811, Spain appointed nine successive governors of the Malvinas. On March 18, 1811, the last of these governors, Gerardo Bondas, was instructed by his government to abandon the Islands.

Argentina became an independent nation in July 1816, taking over the territories formerly ruled by Spain from Buenos Aires.

The Malvinas remained unoccupied until 1820 when the government of Buenos Aires commissioned an American named David Jewitt to take them over Jewitt had joined the Argentine Navy "to serve the great cause of American independence". He arrived in the Islands commanding the Argentine Frigate "Heroina" on November 2, 1820 and informed the Government of Buenos Aires that he had "taken possession of the Islands in the name of the country to which they belong by natural law."

In 1822 Luis Vernet, an entrepreneur from Hamburg, persuaded the Argentine government to grant him sealing and fishing rights. In 1829 Vernet was appointed Governor.

By 1830, the Malvinas were undisputably a part of Argentina.

1833: By Jingo, We've Done It

On January 2, 1833, the British occupied the Islands by force. They ordered the Argentines out and forbade them to return.

Until April 2, 1982, any Argentine visiting the Islands had to show his return ticket on arrival.

In 1851 the British granted the "Falkland Islands Company" a virtual monopolistic control over the Islands' economy.

This company profited handsomely until recently. Although its fortunes are certainly on the wane, it has always been a stumbling block in the negotiations between Britain and Argentina.

Second Class Citizens

The population of the Island is divided in two categories: The locals - who call themselves "Kelpers" after the seaweed that grows in abundance off-shore—and the British.

The latter includes governmental officials, high ranking officers of the Falkland Island Co., radio operators, etc.

The "Kelpers" have historically been excluded from the more relevant jobs, are not considered British citizens and are only allowed to visit Great Britain once every two years and for a short

The highest ranking authorities of the Archipelago are appointed directly by London.

The islanders are second class citizens. They have no right of "Abode" in Great Britain unless they are grandchildren of British citizens.

Dwindling Population

In 1937 nearly 3,000 people inhabited the Islands. Today less than 1,800 remain.

Many Islanders emigrated when they realized that there was little future left for them under British rule.

Britain has never shown an active interest in the Islands. There are no proper hospitals nor educational facilities. Many children from Malvinas have to attend school in Argentina and Uruguay. Many sick Islanders have been restored to health at hospitals in mainland Argentina.

A British ship arrives at the Islands once every three months. The only airstrip on the Islands was built by Argentina which has, since 1972, maintained the only regular air service to and from the continent, thus providing the only real link between the Malvinas and the rest of the world.

All the fuel for the islands is supplied by the Argentine Petro-Argentine teachers have been working on the Islands for nearly ten years.

All of these efforts by Argentina were commended by the United Nations (Resolution 3160 of December 14, 1973):

Give Us—And Them—A Chance

Argentina has not regained the Islands to inflict injury or loss on the local inhabitants, nor to modify their lifestyle.

Argentina does not wish to force anyone to change their citizenship. After all, a community of 17,000 British subjects lives peacefully and has prospered in Argentina.

Argentina is willing to negotiate a special statute for the Islanders that will guarantee their interests and preserve their rights.

Furthermore, Argentina is willing to grant special rights and economic assistance that will create better conditions for the development of the economy and the welfare of the Islanders.

A Colony?—You Decide

Article 73 of the Charter of the United Nations establishes the obligation by member states administering non-autonomous territories to report regularly to the Secretary General on the conditions in these territories.

Complying with this obligation, Great Britain has periodically submitted reports on the Malvinas to the Secretary General, thus recognizing the colonial status of this territory.

On December 20, 1960, resolution 1514 (XV) of the general assembly established the need to put an immediate end-to coloni-

As a result of this resolution, a special committee was set up to deal with cases of de-colonization. This committee of 24 members included the Malvinas Islands in the list of territories to be

In 1965, the General Assembly issued resolution 2065 (XX) which declared the Malvinas a colony, acknowledged the dispute between Argentina and Great Britain and urged both governments to initiate negotiations without further delay.

Put It On The Back Burner, Chum

Britain has consistently stalled on the discussions. For the past 17 years almost no progress has been made.

British negotiators have delayed, procrastinated and refused to take decisions conducive to a reasonable agreement. Always polite, but hardly ever constructive.

By 1975 Argentina was losing its patience. The government recalled its Ambassador from London and asked the British Ambassador in Buenos Aires to leave.

However, two years later, talks were resumed at Argentina's

In 1981, at the United Nations, Argentina warned the United Kingdom that it would not allow the Malvinas to continue as a British Colony and asked for renewed and serious negotiations.

Argentina made a final diplomatic proposal in February of this year. It suggested that a permanent committee be set up to deal with the matter. The United Kingdom did not accept this proposal.

What Happened At Leith

Leith is a tiny settlement on the Island of San Pedro in the South Georgias, a dependancy of the Malvinas. It was once a whaling station. The factory is still there, obsolete and unused for many years.

An Argentine entrepreneur by the name of Constantino Davidoff was awarded a formal contract to dismantle the factory and sell it off as scrap. The British government was aware of this contract and requested Mr. Davidoff to furnish a list of the personnel that would be involved in the job. Mr. Davidoff complied with this request.

On arrival, Mr. Davidoff's group of 43 workmen hoisted the Argentine flag, which caused yet another diplomatic point of contention. But the British sent the HMS Endurance to evict the Argentines from the Island.

The Argentine Navy responded by sending the ship "Bahia Paraiso" — a vessel used for supplying its scientific bases in the Antarctic—to prevent the eviction.

On March 30, news from London indicated that the nuclear submarine Superb had left Gibraltar for the Antarctic together with a conventional submarine. London's Independent Television Network program "News at 10" said that, as well as the subs, a Royal Navy tanker was also on its way.

On April 2, Argentina reacted to this impending aggression by occupying the Malvinas, South Georgias and Sandwich Islands. The occupation of the islands was carried out without a single loss of life to the British. The Union Jack was lowered, neatly folded, and returned to the outgoing governor. The British then countered by sending a huge Naval force, including nuclear-powered submarines and two aircraft carriers. They proclaimed a 200-mile war zone around the Islands and threatened to "shoot first" at any Argentine ship found in this zone.

The threat of all out war is therefore the end result of a series of escalating responses to a relatively minor incident in the South Georgias.

After 17 fruitless years of negotiations to gain back what had been unfairly taken from her, Argentina finally decided to reclaim control of the Malvinas. The incident at Leith was simply the straw that broke the camel's back.

28 Million Argentines Recover the Malvinas

The question of the Malvinas has little or nothing to do with whatever government happens to be in power in Argentina.

Not all the Argentines share the same views on politics or on economics, much less on governments, but we all share the same view on the Malvinas. About this there should be no mistake. The Malvinas are a common national cause.

Sorry

Argentina does not bear a grudge against Britain or its people. There are over 100,000 Argentines of British descent in Argentina. Britain has investments worth billions of dollars in our country. Britain has played a significant role in the making of modern Argentina.

For almost 150 years, the Malvinas issue has embittered the relationship between two nations that have many things in common.

We are a peaceful people. We have not fought a war since the Mid-19th century, but we firmly believe that what is ours, is ours.

more or less equal terms with the sighted. They play in two chessborards and are allowed to feel the pieces. These have spikes which are fixed into the board by means of holes they are bound to move it, this being their equivalent of our touch-piece-move rule.

The blind have fine players. The presnt world Krylov of the Soviet Union, is at least of international master strength-I would put him at about 2,450 in Elo rating-and is possibly even higher since that figure is regarded as the minimum rating for a grandmaster.

My friend, and I the late Sir Rupert Cross, who was blind from birth both played in the London Boys Championship for 1926 and he trounced me unmercifully. Though I got rather the better of him during our university days, he was still quite a formidable player who did well in the sighed British championship.

Like every blind chessplayer I have met, he enjoyed playing the game. For the sighted it is a pleassure to play chess, for the unsighted, it is delight. In 1968 I controlled a blind shess Olympiad at Weymouth, a tourmaner. ment among many nations and each country was rep-resented by a team of four. It was heartwarming to see their enthusiasm and joy in playing.

I had exactly the same feelings when I contrilled the fifth blind individual world championship at the Royal Victoria Hotel in St Leo-nards, Sussex, recently. Players fought hard enough in their competition but they also had a joyous gaiety that is rarely found in sighted chess. There were no disputes for me to settle and I came away from the event with feelings of exhilaration.

Eleven rounds Swiss were played among 27 players, the reason for the odd number being the non-arrival of the Turkish representative. The Russian Krylov was a clear first with 9 points and no losses. He was world champion last time when the competition was held four years ago at Bruges in Belgium.

Second was his countryman, Rudennsky, with eight points and the bronze medal went to the East German Wunsche with 7½. There followed Jukanovic (Yugoslavia) and Zier (West Germany) 7, Baretic (Yugoslavia) and Sandrin (USA) 64, Atanosov (Bulgaria), Benson (England)

Before I describe the stirring events at Cowbridge, let me digress. The Camrose series provides a rare opporseries provides a rare oppor-tunity to watch good bridge, yet invariably these matches are sparsely attended. The recent television series has conclusively demonstrated that an audience for bridge exists, so what explains the public apathy?

On my return to London I suggested to one of the EBU officials that it was the height of folly to stage a Camrose match in a place-like that "It is our deliberate policy to encourage the growth of bridge in the more sparsely populated areas," he replied pompously.

The Scottish Bridge Union and the Welsh Bridge Union are well as w

The Bourbon Street parade

Louisiana is conscious of its reputation — jazz, Spanish moss, breakfast in eight courses - and works hard to fulfill the traveller's precon-

In New Orleans, the prud-ish spirit which shut down the brothels of Storyville in 1917 has long been extinguished, even reversed. Topless bars, bottomless bars, girl bars and boy bars ("24 Boys On Hand!") now flourish on balcomed Bour-bon Street alongside rooms in which decrepit veterans and bored youngsters crank out blueprinted Dixieland for the tourist trade.

On a gentler note, the legendary breakfast at Brennan's begins with bourbon-spiked milk punch, its re-maining courses lubricated by wine under the envious gaze of blue-rinsed coach parties quening for tables.
The city's best value is probably its streetcars: the one named Desire went out of commission some years ago, but its sisters still clang up and down St Charles Avenue at a satisfyingly relaxed pace, opening up a cross-section view of the city's considerable history, from the sleaze of the French Quarter to the opulence of residential Audubon Park.

Evidence is everywhere that New Orleans is on its way to joining Dallas and Arianta as one of the capitals of the prosperous New South. Oil from the Gulf of Mexico has brought investment in a giant Superdome, fit for football championships and Rolling Stones concerts, and in a sprauncy shopping district which, according to our hilariously downbeat guide, will shortly contain "Pucci, Gucci, Gucci, and the property gure" .. all them 'oochy' guys".

Still, for all its undeniable character, and despite the never-closing bars of Bour-bon Street, the city can and should be seen quickly, before moving off — prefer-ably by car — for other views of Louisiana.

The wise will immediately head north-west along Interstate Highway 10, crossing the Mississippi by Sunshine Bridge and taking US Highway In White Carle where way I to White Castle, where, just a bugle-call from the levee holding back the river, they will find a house called Nottoway. Behind the curving steps, raised porch, tall windows and white Greco-Italian columns of Nottoway's deceptively narrow antebel-lum façade lie no fewer than 64 rooms arranged in a labyrinth of corridors, bal-conies and galleries. Some-where within these is the White Ballroom, where the

Other rooms in other countries possess the qual ties of a time machine somewhere, perhaps, there is even one to match the potency of the White Ballroom. Entered at dusk by the from its crystal chandelier ballroom becomes again the location chosen by the house's first owner, the sugar planter John Hampden Randolph, to bring his eight daughters out into Louisiana

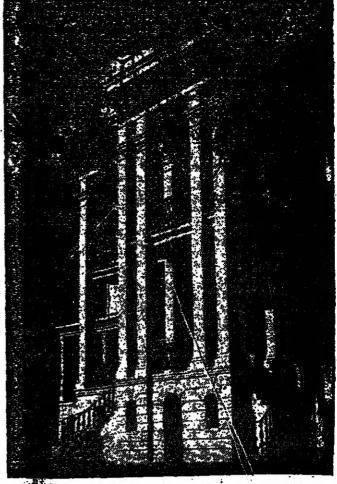

Many layers of creamy paint, most of them original, invite the feet to glide across the glossy wooden floor, marble mantles, cypress marble mantles, cypress columns and delicate plaster friezes reduce the modern visitor to a rapt silence, the better to catch imagined echoes of long-ago music, laughter and rustling silk. Completed in 1857, Notto-way's singular power is drawn from its combination of immense conception with domestic intimacy. The extra-ordinary Edelity of its resto-ration, which at present extends throughout a third of the rooms, is the work of Arlin Dease, a young design-er who has made such projects among Louisiana's long neglected great houses his speciality. Nottoway rep-resents the pinnacle of his art: he bought the house two years ago, when a mere couple of rooms were inhabited and the rest were mothballed; it is now his home, and its refurbishment will be finished in 1984.

Dease's accomplice in this grand design is Stephen Saunders, the house's curator, an art history graduate who leads small parties from room to room, delivering an articulate and affectionate commentary which fills the place with the characters and life of its brief golden age, terminated to all intents by the outbreak of the Civil War in 1861.

Like many such plantation houses, Nottoway has rooms to let by night, furnished as closely as possible to Randolph's original schemes, in some cases with original pieces. The rates are $75 for a single room and $100 for a double, which scarcely seems excessive for a night in paradise.

Nottoway is the San imeon of plantation houses: others are more modest and occasionally drab, although Houmas House, on the river near Convent, has a fine garden with fronds of grey-green Spanish moss hanging dolorously from huge oaks, seeming to weep for a vanished era. The charmingly named Shadows on the Teche is an unusual example of such a house in an urban location (its builder owned several plantations and planned his residence at their centre, which turned out to Iberia have looked at the confused issue of airline classes and come up with a new approach that's refreshingly logical and relevant. On our European flights we offer a choice of either First Class and new Economy Class, or Preference Class and new Economy Class. Each one is represented by one of the simple graphic symbols you see here. Together, they give you greater choice and greater flexibility.

First is First Class, with the very highest standards of service and attention - superb meals, vintage wines, an open bar, faster boarding facilities and in many airports, special waiting lounges.

Next, our new Preference Class, which replaces First Class on certain European routes.

Wherever possible, we provide a separate check-in counter to speed you on to the plane and offer outstanding service in a separate travelling cabin.

Finally, there's our New Economy Class, a result of Iberia's efforts to make flying as affordable as possible.

But while the prices are low, our service is of the highest order.

Three carefully planned classes, three logical symbols.

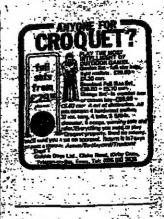

Later this year, on Intercontinental flights, we will be introducing the superb new Grand Class - offering a five star travelling experience.

All a sign of Iberia's efforts to make flying as pleasurable as possible.

Making yourself at home at work

Storing people is wrong. That, in to discover a new ornamental essence, is the message put language but within a contemporessence, is the message put anguage out within a contemporacross by a display of furniture called Home Office, launched this week by designer Johnny Grey. You have only to look round the average office to see his point—the more functional, the surtions the arever the work.

office - more and more necessary as the forecast is that most executives will: eventually be working from home, plugged into Control via their mini terminals.

There are conference tables that are as handsome as dining that are as handsome as diming tables, trestel tables that would provide extra surface when needed but will store when not, a drinks cabinet (as vital as a golf course for high level deals) with a fridge in the middle, a specially designed two-level table to accommodate an electronic key-

"Systems do five things badly and nothing very well," says Johnny Grey, "My idea is that each design should accomplish one function perfectly."

Not only do they work well, they also look splendid. The combination of blonde ash, black lacquer and red acrylic and coated steel is stimulating, the shapes of the furniture more decorative than is normally associated with an office.

own furniture business, having run an antiques business partitime while he was at college.

He began five years ago by making furniture and accessories for kitchens and has created many original kitchen designs to individual commission. The range of office furniture is, he says, the first time that he has designed, for "an unknown client."

Designing was one thing. Getting prototypes made was quite another, as British furniture manufacturers, with their usual self-protective instinct for not sticking their necks out, were

New developments, of course, cost money, so it is unrealistic to expect Johnny Grey's furniture to be cheap. At £861 for an adjustable shelving unit, £1,700 for a table, £2,752 for an executive desk with filing drawers, it is limited at the moment to those whose budgets match their those whose budgets match their discrimination. Cottoning on to India of the seasons

An exhibition of textiles which represents several years of travelling around India opened this week at Joss Graham's textile gallery at 10 Eccleston Street, London SW1.

The traveller is Lisbet Holmes and all the textiles she has collected are based on rural Indian life, celebrating the pass-ing of the seasons and their festivals, as well as domestic calebrations.

There are embroidered cover from Chamba and the Pahari hills whose designs were drawn by the court artists of the day and are very like the miniature paintings of the region. Embroidered quilts from Bengal are made from worn out clothes decorated with coloured threads taken from the borders of dhotis and saris.

All the textiles are for sale at prices ranging from £10 to £3,800, and the exhibition will continue until May 14.

Detail of a 3ft square embroidered Kantha from Jessore district, East Bengal late nineteenth century, depicting Rama, Sita and Hanuman. Left: appliqued canopy from Kutch; 19th century, 4ft 8in x 4ft 10in. £320. Both in the exhibition of Indian Folk textiles at 10 Eccleston Street. SW1.

For your delight

Embroiderers, I am told, are always searching for patterns, so if you are among them you will be glad to know of two collections of motifs — the first of a series called These For Your Delight.:

The first is a small portfolio of 20 floral motifs which can be worked on most textiles and can be transferred by tracing. The second is a group of bird and animal sampler motifs; originally worked by young girls in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. They are charted on graph paper with 8 squares to the inch and are intended to be transferred to even-weave linen or canvas. Both can be used by embroiderers who would like to devise their own patterns, but do not feel capable of the basic drawing. Suggestions are included for organizing the designs into borders or all-over patterns.

The collections have been gathered by Joan Edwards who also produces an attractive range of booklets on the history of various styles of embroidery. The subjects covered are Berlin Work, Black Work (each £1.25), Embroidery 1900 to 1950 (£1.40) and Gertrude Jekyll, Embroiderer, Gardener and Craftsman (£1.60).

floodlights have revolutionized the installation of these features. If you plan to install a pool, consider siting it so that water and electricity can be taken to it together with the minimum of difficulty. Submersible pumps and lights nowadays are powered by a transformer which gives a safe 24-volt output. There are various types of pump: those which only push water up to tumble down again to form a waterfall and those which will operate a fountain. Larger pumps will do both at the same time.

The Hozelock Minicascade at about £38 will give a fountain over 3ft high falling in a circle 30in across, or pump water for a waterfall.
Their Varijet at about £50 will do both at once and the fountain can be adjusted to fouriain can be adjusted to give four jet patterns. Full particulars of these pumps, pool lighting, hose fittings and various sprinklers are obtainable from Hozelock Ltd, Haddenham, Aylesbury, Buckinghamshire.

A garden pool, or if your garden is on a slope, a series of pools, is a delightful feature but not to be undertaken lightly. Thought must be given to the installation because, although the ground may slope, the actual pools must be level, otherwise there will be an ugly few inches of poolside showing above the water level. Then one should try to so arrange the pool that there is a margin around it capable of being flooded easily to accommodate moisture loving or bog plants such as primulas, Iris kaempferi, calthas, trollius and astilbes.

Planting the pool itself has to be done with discretion.
Seek advice from pool specialists or from books about water gardens. It is easy to overstock a pool with too many water lilies or with fish. It is also important to have a balanced planting of oxygenating plants in pool for the well being of the fish.

It is also important to have a balanced planting of oxy-genating plants in the pool for the well being of the fish. All this may sound rather formidable but it is worth taking the trouble to have the installation, planting and stocking right from the start because a well-tempered water garden is a really delightful feature giving endless pleasure.

water is a good conductor of heat whereas air (in between the soil particles) is not. So keep your strawberry beds moist, compact and weed free at flowering time. Recently I was surprised to hear from several people that cymbidiums, to me the most delightful of orchids, were not easy plants for the amateur because it could be difficult to persuade to flower year after year. This comment I think originated from an orchid dealer - why I do not understand. I and many friends have never had any difficulty in growing cymbidiums for many years.

I consider them to be the This has been a fairly late easiest of all orchids, provided one can give them a minimum night temperature has not encouraged prema-ture growth and flowering growing gently all the year which would almost surely round and give them a few liquid feeds during the grow-liquid feeds during the growing period. Our few plants take the rough with the smooth in our greenhouse, flower regularly and produce more pseudo-bulbs each year so that we are gradually increasing our stock.

Furthermore, they flower for a month or more in a cool room indoors and of course a cymbidium with four or five spikes of up to a dozen flowers gives one a great deal of one upmanship and much personal pride and pleasure. For small greenhouses or small rooms, the miniature cymbidiums which have come e, seasonal apple-stealing, when strawberry plants are to the fore in recent years now have areas where in flower they may be are very popular.

How Argentina's Brits are bearing up by Tony Emerson, special correspondent in Buenos Aires.

For the 17,000 British subjects in Argentina and about 100,000 of British descent who speak English as a first language and lead a British way of life, the events of this month have been a nightmare. Unlike the leader writers of La Prensa or The Times who have a comfortably blinkered conviction that all the right is on their side, the British community in Argentina understand both points of view and fear that the damage done by enforc-ing either will greatly out-weigh the benefits that might accrue to the enforcer.

This, of course, is a non-political attitude, but the British in Argentina have always eschewed politics and followed Dr Johnson's dictum that man is never more innocently employed than when making money. Indeed, the Anglican Cathedral in Buenos Aires is opposite the Stock Exchange,

For such an apolitical community the main desire is to be allowed to go about one's own business without disturbance. This desire was not respected by the guerrilla groups in the early 1970s who disrupted the prosaic university studies of the young Anglo-Argentines and kid-napped or blackmailed the finance for their cause. So when the military reaction got under way in 1976 the British community were very relieved and quite prepared to overlook violations of human rights — especially as their rights had only been violated by the guerrillas. In this they were at variance with the courageous stand taken by the journalists of the English language newspaper, the Buenos Aires Herald: but they continued to take the Herald for the social news and the syndicated

The British community also supported the theory, if not always the practice, of the open economy as preached by Dr Jose Alfredo Martinez de Hoz, economy minister for the first five years of military rule. Indeed, one of the few points of agreement between the Buenos Aires Herald and the Review of the River Plate, the two community papers, was their support for "Dr Joe". When, therefore, General Galtieri took office and appointed as his chief ministers an orthodox monetarist. Dr Roberto Alemann, and a former representative of British companies, Dr Nica-nor Costa Mendez, relations

In one respect that reaction, though all understood In one respect that re-lationship paid off, for on April 2 no sooner had the Argentine Government announced the invasion of the Falklands than it published a decree which specifically forbade the committing of injury or insult to the persons or property of British and English speaking residents of Argentina. Offenders against the decree would be repressed with the full vigour of the law, and as human rights activists would testify, that vigour could be quite something, In many cases police were sent to do guard duty outside British houses or in British farms: but anti-British feeling was so negligible that farmers soon began to grumble about the extra mouths to feed in the shape of their uniformed guards. For the Argentines did not feel that going into the islands was a particularly anti-British act, and all of them bent over backwards to apologize to Britain for any inconvenience that the invasion might have caused, Nevertheless the psycho logical blow to the British community was profound: their country of origin and the motives and feelings which had led up to it: in their quest for minimum disturbance they hoped that the British would come to a commercial arrangement that might even bring business

THE FOREIGN OFFICE ADVICE

The following message to Britons in Argentina was being broadcast from last night on the BBC's World Service: Now that the British task force is approaching the area of the Falkland Islands, a period of increasing tension and risk could lie ahead which should be taken into account by all Scritish citizens remaining in Argentins. Those who have not so far acted upon earlier warnings are asked to consider again whether they should take an early opportunity of leaving the country by normal commercial means.

A further strain on relations with the mother country was the case of the Rt. Rev. Richard Cutts, the Anglican Bishop. He had volunteered to fly to the Falklands with a deputation of British farmers in order to explain to the islanders the realities of living under Argentine rule. When the news reached Britain, the hishop received a telephone call from the office of the Archbishop of Canterbury removing the Falkland Islands from his jurisdiction and forbidding him to leave Argentina. As one member of the community grumbled over lunch at the English Club: "Who are the Fascists

The instinctive shunning of politics had led the community to keep what they called a "low profile" but what the more forceful members preferred to label as ducking the issue. The common denominator was that all wished to avoid a that all wished to avoid a shootout between Britain and Argentina, so a series of telegrams was sent to the British Government asking for a negotiated settlement without the use of force. These telegrams caught the eye of the Argentine Navy, who have most to lose by British use of force, and a senior captain was detailed to the community. Chief of these was the blacking of the Buenos Aires Herald by the Peronist Newspaper distributors' union on the grounds that it had not supported the invasion. Within a day of the captain taking charge the Herald was back.

But the case of the Herald outlines the British comm-unity's chief worry. While the present Western-oriented government remains in power they have nothing to fear from official sources. But would that government have the will or resources to prevent profiteers from looting British residents' property in the name of pairiotism if a shooting war breaks out in the South Atlantic? And, worse, what would happen if a zenopobic, populist regime were to replace the present junts as a result of domestically unacceptable concessions or military set-

This is one of those instances where the support of other parties really does matter, both as an indication to the world of national unity and as a reassurance to public opinion at home. But in the final analysis it is always the cohesion of the governing party that is critical in British politics. For how long will this remain if harsh choices have to be

The unity of the Cabinet at the moment is impressive. This has for most of its life been such a fractious Cabinet that, even though it has been working much better over about the last six months, there was always the possi-bility that the old divisions and tensions would become apparent again in times of stress. This has not hap-

Many of the decisions are being made by the small mner group dealing with the Falklands, but this is not resented by other ministers who accept that crisis management cannot be conducted effectively by large numbers and that for security reasons tactical military assessments cannot be passed up and down Whitehall. Within this inner group particular influ-ence is being exercised by Mr Pym and Mr Whitelaw, who are reported to be working especially well together. In the longer term this is bound to have its affect on the psychological balance within the Cabinet, provided that the crisis is ultimately resolved without a fiasco. In the shorter term they and the them well placed to command the consent of their collea-

This group would be firmly opposed to the use of force and would probably be prepared to settle for the best terms available. But in between there is a third group, probably the most numerous and tertainly holding the balance, which is looking to the Government to extract reasonable terms from the Argentines by hard negotiating basked with the threat of force.

The past quarter-century has been the most eventful period in the whole history of astronomy. Nor is there any sign of slackening in the rate of progress. The space telescope, due to be launched from the American shuttle in 1985, will open up entirely new paths of investigation.

It will be a 94-inch reflec-tor, a "free-flying" instrument operating from above the top of the earth's blanket of air and controlled from Patrick Moore first prethe ground. The quality of the image will be perfect all the time, and radiations of all wavelengths will be available. The main emphasis will be on studies of remote stars and star systems, although the solar system will not be neglected. For instance, we may learn something definite about the puzzling planet Pluto, about to supplement our present painfully meagre

The space telescope will be visited periodically for servicing, and after five years or so it may even be brought down for a thorough overhaul before being relaunched. It will be in use practically all the time, and should be able to penetrate farther into the universe than has ever been possible before. In particular, it will be used to study quasars. At present the most remote known quasar has an estimated distance of 13,000 million light-years, which is well out toward the edge of the observable uni-

Who now could whistle me the first of the 29 winners, from 1956, "Refrain" by Lys Assia, or for that matter the 1959 choice, Teddy Scholten's mortal "n Beetje"? In case you've done a spot of rapid arithmetic and are now wondering how an annual contest can produce 29 winners in 26 years, there were four champions in that golden year 1969, including the song many authorities

Proposed reform of Falklands issue a case for The Hague coroners' courts

From the Hampshire County

Sir Mr Michael Meacher, MP (April 13) might have been expected to get his facts right, To say that there is no right of appeal against a coroner's verdict is of course incorrect. On application to the divisional court to quash the inquisition the court may order a fresh inquest to be held before a different coroner. Legal aid is available.

Mr Meacher proposes that any inquests where there is prima facie evidence of violence or neglect in custody should be removed from coroners and dealt with the coroners and dealt with the coroners. with by a High Court judge. Classics in declension

From Dr John Percival .

Sir, All over the country there are teachers of classics endeavouring, in the face of government cours, unsympathetic local authorities and hostile headmasters, to maintain the tradition of Greek has the state provided the Church to maintain the tradition of Greek and Latin studies to which Mr Austin Davis (April 19) is rightly devoted. Many of them work without the support of colleagues in the discipline, and are prepared, in the interests of their subject, to give classes outside the normal school timetable and in addition to their normal

There are various ways in which we can support them. One, no doubt, is to write letters to The Times deploring the fact that fourth-form boys can no longer write Greek verses in the Sapphic metre. Another is, like Philip Howard, to cheer them up by articles which emphasise the brighter aspects of their situation. Another, which is the concern of organizations like the auon. Another, which is the concern of organisations like the Classical Association and the Joine Association of Classical Feachers, is to do everything we can to provide them with practical encouragement and help.

ascribing their inaction to the indifference of the Argentines?

There are in effect four methods of resolving an international discussion. Sir, In your powerful leader (April 21) you say: "Perhaps Britain should suggest to Argen-ting that it (the issue of sover-eignty) is now taken to The Hague, where it belongs more than in the operations rooms of opposing navies." I respectfully One of the several mysteries in the Falkland Islands imbroglio is the position of the parties regarding a reference to the International Court of the question of sovereignty. On Monday the Foreign Secretary told the Commons that he had no reason to think that the Argentines had changed their objection to allowing the matter to go to the International Court, what time his colleague Lord Belstead, while confirming that the Argentines had never shown any interest in referring the sover-eignty question to the Inter-national Court, made it clear that the British Government had not proposed such a reference, and has never suggested to any Argentine Government that the Falkland Islands dispute should Article 33 of the UN Charter imposes an obligation of parties (i.e. states) in dispute to seek first of all a solution by one or more peaceful means, which specifically includes arbitration. Such arbitration is entrusted to the International Court of Justhe international court of justice, which, by Article 32, is constituted "the principal judicial organ of the United Nations" whose Statute is annexed to the Charter and forms "an integral part" of it. By Article 36 of the Statute "the jurisdiction of the Court comprises all cases which the parties refer to it." Clearly therefore the dispute as to sovereignty, in its essence a matter of law, is appropriate for reference to the Court.

Why then has neither party suggested a reference? There appears to be no logical reason. The Court exists for the resolution of such disputes and has the necessary expertise. We believe we have a good case in law. Why then hesitate?

To view the possession of a good case as a disincentive to going to court is a novel concept to me. Or is each party waiting for the other, like the Earl of Chatham and Sir Richard Stra-chan at the battle of Walcheren? And is the junta giving as a

Sir, May I expand Mr M. A. Taylor's letter published in your issue of April 17. The weather sense of a leech was recognized several hundred years ago. Thus several hundred years ago. The two species can only be distinguished by close examination of the bill and the plumage round its root. > national dispute. There is nego-tiation, with or without an honest broker; there is arbitration; there what Continental lawyers call an "amiable compositeur", such as is provided for, if the parties so wish, in commercial disputes by Article 13 of the Rules of the Court of Arbitration of the International Chamber of Commerce; and, finally, there is war.

The first method has been tried with the help of the praiseworthy and pertinacious efforts of Secretary Haig. But of course his role was confined to that of honest broker, in effect a go-between peddling the prop-ositions of the parties to each other. He was never entrusted with the superior role of "amiable compositeur" with the power to prescribe his own solution.

No doubt the parties did not want to give him such a role. Nor was it indeed necessary in view of the machinery of arbitration, readily available under the aus-pices of the United Nations.

No further time should in my view therefore be lost in putting the suggestion to the Argentines and arranging a reference to the Court, subject only to prior withdrawal of Argentine troops in compliance with UN Resolution 502. This need not involve any interruption of simultaneous negotiation. Indeed it may well help and expedite. This pattern, a commonplace in commercial arbitrations, may well be reflected in this arbitration between states.

There will thus be two mechanisms operating simultaneously to prevent the evil of the fourth method, resolution by conflict, and to give effect to the principle enunciated by Sir Winston in one of his less gradiloquent but nevertheless relevant aphorisms, "Jaw-jaw is better than war-war" - the formal method of arbitration and the less formal negotiating talks that would accompany it.

These are the advantages of resort to arbitration. There may be countervailing disadvantages, but if so, nobody has yet spelt them out. Unless some hitherto unknown obstacle is identified. I unknown obstacle is the pre-think we should let the prescribed procedures have their chance before perhaps sadly it is too late. I am, Sir,

Many of us who listen to the debates in the Commons are not at all happy that such a Chamber should be responsible for the affairs of the Church. It is appalling that appointments within the Church are still at the mercy of Prime Ministers who are not even members of the Church of England. The Anglican Church worldwide has grown from the Church of England and Ireland, and the Episcopal Church of Scotland, and only in England is it established and therefore open to interference from the Commons. The Church of Scotland does not permit such nonsense. It is time we called a halt to this and told the Commons what we think of them.

Though it has come to merit scrutiny and rescrutiny under the penumbral threat of nuclear annihilation, its principles remain intact. Its relevance to the issue of the Falkland Islands crisis is clear. The conclusions that can be drawn from it are not absolute, one way or the other, but they certainly should permit Christians in Britain and Argentina to feel both a deep sadness at the prospect of war and an acceptance that it can happen, and has often happened, between Christians. Religion helps us all to see paradoxes in human behaviour and to accommodate them - by enabling us through understanding to accept that they need not and should not become intolerable. So we come to the paradox of Christians at war. The one exception to the command-ment "Thou shalt not kill" is that which entitles people to participate in the preservation of security of their fellow men. The injunction to love thy neighbour must in practice imply a preferential possibility among one's neighbours. In the name of love, or charity, the Christian sanc-tion which legitimises the use of force to repel aggression of force to reper aggression against one set of neighbours is that it would lead to a lesser evil, when the greater seem to provide the moral evil is that more suffering basis only for an absolute would ensue from a failure to pacifism, as honorable a state resist that aggression. He can have no absolute loyalty to the first if it conflicts with his moral commitment to the second. It is therefore important in the case of the Falklands affair to keep clear in the public conscience the moral

control conduct in war. The world has become more secumore secular a society the more it might be tempted to believe that the only real constraint on the conduct of war is the possibliity of retaliation in kind.

There is a different constraint in Christian doc-context behind every policy decision. That should be the message of the Church. Just war can only be just if it is caused by injustice— aggression; if its aims are the restoration of justice — for the greater good of the world as a whole; and if its conduct is conditioned by the doctrine of minimum force. That must mean that the necessity - not the intention but simply the unsolicited necessity — to kill people must be confined to those directly involved or clearly co-operating with the force which has to be resisted.

As St. Augustine said "The wise man will wage just wars; for if they were not just he would not wage them and would therefore be delivered from all wars for it is the wrongdoing of the opposing party which compels the wise man to wage just wars; and this wrongdoing even though it give rise to no war, would still be matter of grief to man because it is man's wrongdoing".

Above all, the eternal objective, even if it has to be reached through war, must be a better peace.

sale at Sotheby's on June 21. Similar stamps, presumably artist's signs, are found in some five other manuscripts now known, all belonging to the same school. Dr Christopher de Hamel believes that the book offered at Sotheby's was produced in Haarlem and builds round this assumption the theory that the small initials may have been a primitive form of printing with "letters"; he connects this with the ancient legend of the invention of printing by Laurens Janszoon Coster in Haarlem. All experts agree that stylisti-cally the manuscript belongs to a group of Hours produced in the northern Netherlands, partly intended to be traded far and wide. Some were destined for use in England. The city of Utrecht was at this time especially known for a flourishing trade in such

The crucial point in Dr Hamel's theory is in placing the pro-duction of the book in Haarlem. His argument for doing so is the appearance of St Bavo, patron saint of the City of Haarlem, in the otherwise rather featureless calendar listing feast days for the use of Rome.

St Bavo, however, was also, and in the first place, the patron saint of the City of Ghent. On inspection of the manuscript it appeared that there is a second unusual saint in this calendar who is found on the same page as St Bavo: it is St Donatian, patron saint of the City of Bruges, and exclusive to that city where his relics were kept. When taken together the two saints, patrons of the two great Flemish cities, indicate that this book was intended for a client in the county of Flanders, and that it had nothing whatever to do with the City of Haarlem, nor with the legendary Laurens.

If the information is accurate and was honourably obtained I think, to the contrary, that you are to be congratulated on responsible and enterprising journalism because developments in a "great university" lie in the public domain. If there has been irresponsibility, it was in the failure of those connected with the appointment of a new Principal to observe that confidentiality which candidates for posts are entitled to expect.

The Vice-Chancellor is really pleading that you, Sir, should have remedied his university's indiscretion by restraining your Education Correspondent from doing her proper work. His view of how the press should behave is comforting for administrators but, like that of many in authority in concentrations of power, damaging to the cause of freedom of information. In ad-dition, he found time to write poetry and two novels, and because of the regard in which his prose style is held he commands a place in our history as a considerable literary figure as well as a most famous divine.

He is one of the greatest of English prose stylists. His Apologia and Idea of a University appear in present university literature syllabuses. Oxford University groups him together with other Victorian thinkers such as Ruskin, Pater and John Stuart Mill in a paper for its English school. Newman studied in detail classical writers and the great Anglican divines of the seventeenth century in order to cultivate the fine and precise effects of his style, and he grew to take pains over his own works. As he said himself:

My book on Justifi-cation ... I write, I write again: I write a third time in the course of six months. Then I take the third: I literally fill the paper with corrections so that another person could not read it. I then write it out fair for the printer. I put it by: I take it up: I begin to correct again; it will not do. Alterations multiply, pages are rewrit-ten, little lines creep in and sneak about. The whole page is disfigured: I write again: I cannot count how many times this process is

When the 640-acre reservoir, costing £444, has filled the Megget Valley, near Peebles, it will guarantee water supplies for Edinburgh and the Lothians well into the twenty first century.

The first water was impounded by Mrs Jan Buchanan, of Lothian Regional Council, who closed a valve inside the concrete intake tower. She said that the water supply of 22.5 million gallens a day would be free of fluoride.

Plans for the reservoir began construction started in 1975. The contractors used more than four million tons of gravel in the project fluoride.

Inflation falls to 10.4 per cent

The yearly rate of inflation fell last month to 10.4 per cent from 11 per cent in February, and could be into single figures in April. This cheering prospect for the Government rounds off three extraordinary weeks in which consistently encouraging economic news has been completely overshadowed by the Falklands crisis. The March inflation rate, measured by the increase in the retail price index over the year, is the lowest since May 1979 when the Government took office. Price rises were ast in single figures in March that year. Inflation is also slowing in Inflation is also slowing in other leading industrial countries, motably the United States. Its consumer price index fell in March by 0.3 per cent — the first monthly fall since Angust 1965 and the sharpest since 1953 — to slow the yearly inflation rate to a 4-year low of 6.8 per cent from 7.7 per cent in Fabruary. A record drop in petrol prices was the main cause of the decline in the CPI but housing costs, food and fares housing costs, food and fares all came down in March.

At the time of the Budget, the Treasury forecast that inflation in the UK would fall to 9 per cent by the end of 1982. But Government economists are now confident of reaching that target "well before the end of the year", in Mrs Thatcher's words on Thusday.

stave off bankruptcy From Nicholas Hirst New York, April 23 The troubled Chigago-based International Har-vester group is asking its bankers to vary the terms of its restructured loans to prevent its going into bankruptcy.

According to reports here,
the group has asked its lenders to reduce its minimum net worth requirement, negotiated as part of a package of debt restructuring four months ago, from $1,000m (£568m) to $800m. Otherwise it is expected to be in default of its agreements by next Friday, the end of its second quarter.

Harvester is also believed to want to be allowed to run total liabilities up to 5.2 times its net worth instead of the four times permitted at present.

Officially, the group is refusing to comment on whether it has asked for variation of the loan terms but a spokesman said: "We have always thought some amendments in our cove-nants would be necessary. We are working closely with the banking group to keep them informed. Should them informed. Should amendments be needed we have every confidence they would be granted."

Many of the Harvester loans have been written off in the banks' balance sheets, but their best bet of recovering their money remains in keeping the group afloat. Four months ago it rescheduled $4,200m of debt. In its first quarter to January 31. It made losses of $299.4m and its total liabilities were then

3.1 times its net worth. But conditions have continued to deteriorate. It has told its bankers it expects to make a loss of around $500m for the 12 months to October 31 and it has become clear that another major restruc-turing of its debt is likely to be required before the repay-ment date of December 15, Harvester's problems arise from a near six-month strike which ended in April 1980. This coincided with some 1,000m of modernization.

Harvester, however, considers that its new investment, coupled with a shaking-out of its workforce, should allow it to take advantage of the upturn in September, the Electron is when it comes. Its bankers, however, are having to play a patient, waiting game.

The Savoy Hotel Group claimed last night it had postponed the release of its full-year results for a week at the group's auditors request due to a minor irregularity caused by the recent sale of one of its properties.

The £7m sale of the Savoy Hotel's east block property above Simpsons in the Strand, has held up the results because the auditors had asked for a few more days to clear up a tax matter.
Yesterday's delay of the results fuelled speculation that the Savoy board, locked in a meeting in the afternoon, were discussing defension moves against fensive moves against a possible renewed hid from Trusthouse Forte. Cost of state benefits would double Call for cut in pensions

Mr Dick Taverne, a leading member of the Social Democratic Party, gave a warning yesterday that the cost of the state pension scheme would eventually double, he said that action was neeed now to reduce benefits before it was too late. His words echoed a veiled comment made in Birmingham last year by the Chancellor of the Exchequer that the country was paying itself pensions that were too

Mr Taverne, QG, was addressing the National Association of Pension Funds' conference in Bournemouth as director of the Institute of Piscal Studies. "It is quite possible that the cost of the state earnings-related scheme will in 50 years' time amount to 35 per cent or higher of a person's wage," he said. There was over-provision

"If people wish to have it now and not save for a rainy day, should this not perhaps be a matter for their own choice?" he asked.

He made it clear that his views should not be taken as official SDP policy. Mr Taverne, who is also a director of the Equity and made a further plea to the conference for an improvement in the preservation of pension benefit.

He encouraged Mr Maurice Oldfield, Pensions director of Allied Breweries and chair-man of the association which represents most of the

He suggested that more index-linked investments should be made available to pension funds. Leaders of the association, which has consistently opwhich has consistently op-posed more than a limited degree of protection for early leavers, were also subjected to calls: for action from Mr Norman Tebbit, Secretary of State for Employment, and

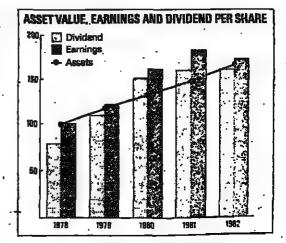

Lord George Brown.

Mr Tebbit, noting the fall in inflation to 10.4 per cent said that single-figure inflation was now within the Government's grasp. Al-though falling inflation re-duced the problems of early leavers and although it was unlikely that the Government would introduce legislation to improve their position in the current Parliament, he said that he had not laid aside the report last year of the Occupational Pensions Board on the subject.

"We want to ensure that the labour market, like other markets, works flexibly and efficiently," he said. We do not want people to be tied to one employer simply to protect their pension.

Speedsend scheme 'was misunderstood' the almost antiquated pro-cedures of the high street banks in the transfer of money where it is essential for conveyancing trans-actions to be completed in quick succession. This frustration is due both to the steadfast refusal of the banks to treat each others' drafts as cleared funds and to their unwillingness to regard transfers by telephone as a normal service. The Speedsend scheme overcomes these obstacles and will enable completion dates to be met much more easily.

To suggest that the object the scheme is to earn "extra interest" is nonsense. Outside the operation of Speedsend, it is the banks that charge interest when uncleared drafts are drawn against. The scheme avoids this effect.

Sir, I read your Family Money page advice on Deeds of Postponement, May I comment on the differences between English and Scots equitable doctrines to sup-port this proposition. At present a spouse without title to the matrimonial home cannot object to the granting of a security. (There are no a house in joint names which must be granted jointly.)

The Matrimonial Homes

(Family Protection) (Scotland) Act of 1981 was passed among other things, to protect a spouse without title to the matrimonial home. The Act is not yet in force but when it is, its effect will be that no security may be granted without the written consent of a non-entitled spouse (ie spouse without title to the house) and indeed, no sale of a matrimonial home will be able to proceed without this consent

Another important provision of this Act is to allow even a non-entitled spouse to get an exclusion order against the other eg to protect against violence to spouse or children.

I would agree with your comment that wives should be separately advised as to giving consents to securities, have to say that I have noted an unfortunate tendency to ignore the existence of a separate Scottish legal system which affects about one tenth of the population of the United Kingdom. It is now more than a year since the Scott Committee proposed that index linked pensions should be extended to all pensioners. One of their recommendations was that pension funds should be enabled to buy indexed bonds to make this possible.

Within a month of their report, the Government announced the first indexannounced the first intex-linked treasury stock, and followed it with several others. The facty that pension fund managers are so reluc-tant to buy an index linked Government security which currently provides a yield of 2 per cent in excess of the rate of inflation shows that they have enormous confidence in their ability to achieve investment returns in excess of the rate of inflation.

In these circumstances they should either acknow-ledge that they want to use this gain to subsidize the employer's pension costs for current employees (because that's what it boils down to) despite the impact on pen-sioners living standards or elsa face up to the need to provide at least partially indexed pensions.

The problem is that far too many employers (and pension funds) are happy to get the higher returns that inflation brings, but loathe to pass the benefits to pensioners.

The advent of index linked

The obvious conclusion to be drawn from these tables is what most policyholders suspeced all along — future projections particularly over the longer-term are largely meaningless.

EDITED BY LORNA BOURKE

Endowment track record beats wild promises

The world's biggest untruth to relinquish this position, The world's biggest untruth is reckoned to be "your cheque is in the post". The results of a recent survey indicate that the second biggest untruth ought perhaps to be "the cash maturity value of your with profits endowment policy is estimated to be."

The most powerful weapon in the insurance salesman's in the insurance salesman's armoury is undoubtedly the glowing forecasts of future cash benefits to be had if you buy one of his policies.

But research carried out by Planned Savings maga-zine, reveals just how inaccurate these forecasts are, and what little use such a projection is in judging the "best buy" when you are looking for a savings type policy.

For example, Irish Life produced some of the most optimistic projections 25 years ago, yet turned in one of the worst performances, finishing at number 48 in the league table of 54 life offices when it came to actual cash maturity values. Conversely, Norwich Union which made some very modest claims back in 1957, managed to finish at number four when it paid out on 25-year endowments in January.

In fairness to the insurance companies, all managed to beat their own projections, so not one ended up with less money than they had been led to expect. But what worries insurance men now, is that current future projections may turn out to wild overstatements of cash maturity values.

High interest rates in recent years have enabled insurance companies to regu-larly increase bonuses and all larly increase bonuses and all life companies have managed to do better than their own projections. Policyholders have been pleasantly surprised to discover that cash maturity values have been as maturity values have been as 143 per cent more than expected.

In recent years investors have tended to opt for the shorter-term policies — 10-year endowments — and here the variation between the projected maturity value and the second se the actual cash payout has been predictably less.

Norwich Union for example gave the eighth highest projected maturity value for a 10-year endow-ment and finished at number eight in the performance tables of actual maturity values. Its estimated total return back in 1972 of £1,405 was £227 less than the actual cash payout in January of £1,632.

At the other end of the scale, Zurich Life gave the most conservative estimate of performance which proved to be remarkably accurate. Zurich was bottom of the league table on actual per-formance paying out £1,239 compared with its estimate of £1,145.

The obvious conclusion to

Far more reliable—
though not without pirfalls—is past performance. Companies which have regularly featured in the top ten, for 10. 15 and 25 years and are regularly appeared in the 15year endowment league table

are NALGO, Equitable Life, Guardian, Norwich Union,
RNPF for Nurses, Standard Life, Friends Provident and Legal and General Legal and General.

For obvious reasons, few companies make much noise about their track record unless they have regularly outperformed their compentors. The vast majority of investors will continue to be misled by inaccurate projec-dons.

What worries some insurance companies is that these projections are likely to be even wider of the mark in coming years and possibly, for the first time by substantial overestimates of actual maturity values.

est rates have enabled most like companies to raise both regular bonuses which are added during the life of the policy, and the terminal bonus which has boosted the eventual payout by an average of 21 per cent.

Current projections are based on bonus rates now based on bonus rates now being paid, but there is considerable doubt about whether these are realistic. There is little justification for assuming that current bonus rates will be maintained for the next 25 years unless you believe that interest rates will remain at current levels.

What should the innocent buyer of life assurance do? First, is more the projections and ask the salesmen about past performance. Alternatively you can do your own homework by getting hold of a copy of performance sur-

Losses continue

Richardsons Westgarth, the engineering stockhold-ing and merchanting group, has continued to trade in the red in the full year.

The Tyneside group lost E833,000 in the year to December compared with pretax profits last time of £746,000. Sales in the period fell by £2m to £47m. The shares yesterday fell ½p to 25p, where the group is capitalized at £3.4m, just a third of its asset value.

manufacturing division where losses were £897,000 compared with profits of £326,000 on sales down £3m at £6.8m. Engineering services, too, sank to a loss of £35,000 against £249,000 profits last time. The stockholding and merchanting division did better, with profits of £99,000, against £171,000.

Mr Archibald Boyd, chair-Mr Archibald Boyd, chairman, says the modest profits earned in the second half year's trading did little to alleviate the heady losses of the first half. In the first six months, Richardsons lost £994,000 and said vigorous action was being taken to reduce losses.

The manufacturing comp nies improved only slightly, although stockholding per-formed better. A further decline in ship-repairing hampered the engineering services division. But Mr Boyd adds that the £17.25m order received from Houlder Offshore for a diving suport vessel was timely.

The final dividend has also been cut — to 1.07p gross against 1.5p — leaving the total payment at 2.14p gross. BENTALLS

Cost cutting and a series of promotions events helped department store group Bentalls to a 50 per cent rise in one tax profits to £2.03m in the year to January on sales up from £44.07m to £47.52m.

Total dividends for the year are up from 1.92p per share gross to 2.58p with a share gross to 2.58p with a 1.7p final payment.

The group's new store at Tonbridge, Kent which forms part of an integrated shopping complex, made a promising start, while sales at the group's other stores continued into the current financial year at a satisfactory level.

Earnings per share rose from 2.37p to 3.72p. Bentalls shares celebrated the results with a 3p jump to 41p where they yield 6.3 per cent. On a current cost basis

Tables turned as Cardiff chase the elusive double

To win both cup and ampionship in the same year i eluded every Welsh rugby a except Lianelli in 1974. This intervening year, have come close to the double. But both sambled at the final hurdle.

h today's Schweppes Welsh cap final against Bridgend, it is Cavill's turn to chase the clusive double. Although it is a cudit's turn to thise the elusive double. Although it is a repeat of last year's match there is a delicate reversal of roles. This may determine the psychological balance in the preparation of both teams. Last year Bridgend came to the Arms Park with hopes of the double, but were thwarted by John Scott's inspired pack. Bridgend may have felt a small town's sense of injustice, but it was their big-city neighbours who amply avenged 14 conspicuous years of failure against Bridgend — they had lost 12 times and drawn twice on their own patch.

This year is is Cardiff who are riding high. They have lost only four of their 36 matches. They have already secured the championship and a cup victory would crown their season.

East Grinstead, runners-up to Trojans in the South League play-offs, could spring a surprise of two. The outlook in the other group is tantalizingly open. The chances of Trojans, a household word in this competition, could never be discounted, but Cambridge City must have an outside chance of reaching the final.

The finals of the women's national county championship tournament takes place in portsmouth today and tomorrow,

It is the culmination of the counties' struggle for supremacy during the season. In the semi finals Sheffield League — North representatives who have county status — play Leicestershire and Suffolk play Surrey.

Leicestershire and Suffolk have both been there before. In fact they drew in the final in 1980. Sheffield League are never far behind and Surrey will be striving for the South's third title this season, the South having already won the tarritorial championship. If they suceed it will set a record.

Tottenham, who have released Glenn Hoddle and Ray Clemence for England, claimed that with their other central defender. Miller, injured they had to retain Price for next Wednesday's league game against Birmingham. Mr England said: "It seems that this is showing favouritism to the other side. Perhaps Burkinshaw wants England to win. Price is our captain and a key figure in the way we play."

Peter Shreeves, Tottenham's assistant manager, said: "We sympathise with Mike England and appreciate that he has a job to do." However, he said that with Miller injured and Price carrying a groin strain it was not possible to allow the Welsh captain to play twice in two days. Mr England said he appreciated there was a backlog of fixtures.

Last month Wales were in a similar position when Price and Stevenson, of Birmingham, withdrew but the Football League decided both players had to released because it was an "international week". Stevenson has again withdrawn and will be replaced by Stevenson, of Swansea. Price's place goes to Flynn, of Leeds.

"Basically, I think there have been three separate mistakes during the past few months, Lauda said. Firstly, I think it was wrong to go so far in stretching the rules by the use of extra water tanks. This was showing no respect for the rules. Okay I know every opportunity has to be tried in a competitive situation. But this was ening too for Ar But this was going too far. At least that is my personal opinion, although I must say that I back my team 100 per cent in everything which they feel they are justified in doing.

In my opinion, the FISA should have stamped on the tanks idea as soon as it was seen way back at the end of last season. By the South African race, for example, they should have said 'No more. From the next race they will be banned.' The third mistake is the failure this week to reach a compromise and save the race as a fully representative Grand Prix. It would have been easy for the It would have been easy for the teams to say okay, FISA hasn't done its job properly but we know the tanks are exploiting the rule, so let us take the things out and we'll put in some lead to make up the weight, just to save the race. Then on Monday we'll have a meeting in Paris and get a proper solution once and for all.

The forthcoming FIA meeting in Casablanca to decide proposed changes in tegulations will once again involve people who have livile understanding of the sport and who therefore can be manipulated. Canizares's round, of course, was the stuff of dreams, including an improbable eagle at the par four listh, which, according to the evidence of Tony Jacklin, one of his playing partners, was only a whisker away from an elbatross. The hole measures 304 yards and Canizares's prodigious tee shot rimmed the hole before dying four or five feet away. particular interest in up and coming golfers, Mrs. Holm always considered that the best way of bringing on juniors was to play with them. feet away.

People still talk of that day in a British women's championship of the sixtles when the young English girl playing alongside Mrs Holm asked casually of the veteran Scot if whe had ever taken part in the championship before. When Mrs Holm answared in the affirmative, the youngster further inquired as to how far she had got.

"Won it twice," came the one what devastating reply.

Elsewhere he had birdies at the four long holes, as any good professional would hope to do, especially if he had the Spainard's length of the tee.

Lyle had a more conventional egels at the 494 yards 15th. He got home, according to his caddy (well, he did study law at Oxford the caddy, I mean) and holed from 10 feet.

potentially top-class filly in Adrana, whose late run, in the hands of Willie Carson, landed her the Daily Mirror Punters Club Stakes in the last strides from the pacemaking Reign.

from the pacemaking Reign.

Adrana displaced a stifle on pulling up after the race, but Brittain was swiftly able to repair the damage and she should be able to fulfil the ambitious campaign (possibly including the Queen Mary Stakes at Royal Ascot) that is planned for her. It was good to see Sandown revive a tradition abandoned some 15 years ago of running a steeplechase on the Friday as well as the Whitbread Gold Cup on the Saturday. The race, the Gold Label Steeplechase, certainly justified its inclusion in the programme by producing perhaps the best finish of the afternoon. News King, who looked like cantering home when he led two fences out, eventually he led two fences out, eventually needed every ounce of John Francome's considerable strength to hold off the challenge of Little Bay ridden with equal determination by John O'Neill.

The day ended with a deteat for the 2,000 Guineas outsider, Silly Steven, who was caught close home by French Current in the Tudor Stakes. At 8,000 guineas, French Current was one of Robert Sangster's cheaper purchases. He recorded a fast time and will now run in the Dee Stakes at Chester.

Saint-Martin takes over on Tender King

The French jockey Yves Saint-Martin will ride Tender King for the Epsom trainer John Sutcliffe in the 2,000 Guiness at Newmarket next Saturday.

Sutcliffe has sacked Tender King's regular partner Philip Waldron because he is unhappy about the way the horse has been ridden this year. "I have nothing against him personally." Sutridden this year. "I have nothing against him personally," Sutcliffe said, "but I was not very happy about Waldron's remarks after the Greenham Stakes at Newbury last weekend, and he will not be riding any more of my horses owned by Esal Commodities."

Waldron finished second on Tender King to Cajum in the Newbury race, and was then quoted as saying that if he had the choice, he would prefer to be on Wind and Wuthering in the classic.

Henry Candy booked Steve Cauthen to ride Wind and Wuthering in the Guineas last weekend and confirmed that he will be sticking to that arrangement.

. A CHANGE IN TIME (tonight, ITV, 10.25) is an astonishingly accomplished first play by Grazyna Monvid. It is painfully realistic, thanks largely to the two central performances by Malcolm Storry as this weekend, both startling in their different ways, though not, of the doomed husband and Marjorie Yates as the resilient wife. In ssence, this is a drama about a factory shop steward, dying from the brain tumour that is violently turning his personality inside out. But the author comes up with a resolution that lifts the play high strong in tonight's play); it resembles Thomas Effice's BBC TV play Going Gently which, you cannot have forgotten, was about two hospital cancer petients, dying another to the first of the same time. Mr Whitehouse says the search for the building's purpose went through a series of eliminations: there was no sign that it was a fortress, despite rudimentary defences added later and is

It was thought the ruins may have been a temple, or a mausoleum. Eminent archeo-logists and antiquarians who went to view and draw them included Piero Ligorio, archi-tect of the Villa d'Este, who was there in the middle of the sixteenth century. The more eminent Palladio was also fascinated, but his also fascinated, but his hotebooks show that he repeated Ligorio's mistakes, suggesting that he was not above copying his colleague's efforts rather than going to see for himself.

Mr Whitehouse is convinced that Le Mura is a Roman version of the Renaissance shooting lodge: it is an easy day's journey from Rome and therefore con-venient for what would now be a weekend retreat and it has adequate facilities for a short stay. It is pretentious, so earlier students were looking for a grandiose explanation rather than the idea that a prosperous Roman had overdone his cottage in the country. With the advent of the Dark Ages it became the centre of a more modest community, forced by the advance of the Goths or fear of brigands to block the ground-floor win-dows. The little church was built and dedicated to St Stephen, which accounts for
